Traditional Games

Itzel Cruz remembers playing a game called, “Sun and Ice”.

“To play you formed two teams. When the players in one team touched you and said “FREEZE”, you are not allowed to move. You stand still until someone from your own team touches you and says, “SUN”. Then you are free to move again.”

Tunkay Goksel from Turkey played a favourite game called “KOREBE”. The game is played by five to ten children. One person was “It”. The eyes of that child were covered with a blindfold. The blindfolded person tried to catch the other players. If someone was caught, that child became the new “It”.

“ACHI” is a game played by school children in Ghana. They used coloured pebbles and a board marked out in dust with a stick. The same game was played in England 1600 years ago. Nowadays it is played in many countries around the world as it doesn’t cost anything and can be played anywhere.
